Introduction

General comments

This is the third year of GCE 2008 and the sixth examination session for Unit 1. Candidates are now aware of how to approach the examination. They understand the need to produce a balanced answer, and they know that the most effective way to structure this answer is to make a number of relevant points, support these with examples, and establish clear links to the question set. Fewer answers than previously were awarded Levels 1 and 2. Most candidates appear to have gained something from their course, and thus are likely to be awarded at least Level 3. Almost all answers include some kind of plan, though some were very long and detailed, to the detriment of their answer overall.

Many candidates still struggle to maintain a focus on the question set. Some are quick to assume that the questions set are similar to those they have met while revising. They must remember that past questions are exactly that, and cannot appear again in the same form. They need to read the questions carefully and respond to what is asked, rather than what they hope they ask of what they have prepared to answer. Knowledge needs to be adapted and employed effectively, rather than taking the form of a prepared answer that may not focus on the question set.

Equally, candidates must ensure that their entire answer focuses on the question. Question D7 required an analysis of the consequences of collectivisation. However, a number of candidates began with a lengthy explanation of the reasons for the introduction of this policy. Similarly, Question D10 required a focus on the civil rights movement, yet many discussed Black Power in their answers. This could be of some relevance, but was rarely made so.

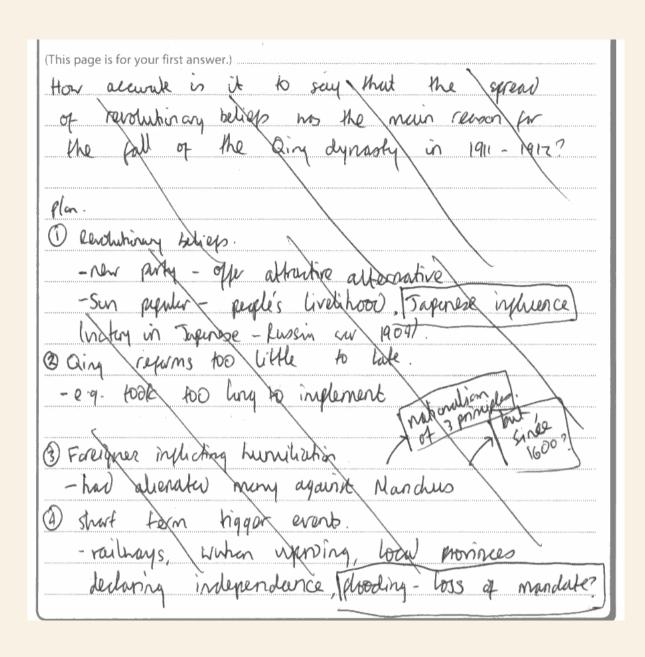

Past reports have highlighted the importance of focusing on the timescale set in the question. Many otherwise strong answers were weakened, sometimes substantially, by failing to cover the period set. Question A11 targeted 1455-61, but many ignored this and wrote only on the causes of civil conflict. Question B1's timescale was 1517-25. Some ignored this completely, focusing instead on the long-term causes of the German Reformation. Question D11 set the parameters of 1954-63, yet many candidates discussed the roles of Truman and Johnson in their answers. An understanding of chronology, and the accurate use of dates, was often a factor which discriminated between Level 3 and Level 4 answers.

It seemed that many candidates did not have the specific knowledge which is essential for accessing the higher levels, but provided generalised examples which showed little depth. Dates, numerical evidence, reference to key individuals and events are all important if candidates are to produce a convincing analysis. If we assume that each topic is studied for at least six weeks, the majority of candidates should have this depth of knowledge.

Many candidates appear to have been armed with a writing template for their answers. The formula appeared to be taking note of the factor raised in the question and then mentioning that other factors (usually three) were also significant. Key marker phrases, such as 'however' and 'on the other hand' were then deployed before reaching some sort of conclusion. This approach can work as long as effective links to the question are established. Several answers looked at other relevant factors but failed to establish their significance beyond asserting that they were important.

Question 1

Candidates were aware of the wide range of reasons behind the fall of the Qing dynasty and many of the better answers categorised them clearly on a chronological basis to explain which were of short term importance and which could be traced back to the nineteenth century. The best candidates were able to take this to its logical conclusion and explain why 1912 was the year of the dynasty's fall. Weaker candidates were unsure of what constituted 'revolutionary beliefs', assuming it must mean Communism, but most could write about resentment at foreign economic domination and could see the start of serious trouble in the Boxer Rising and its aftermath. The contributions of the key individuals were underplayed by some, with Sun Yat-Sen getting more attention than Yuan Shi-Kai. The ambiguous role of Japan as a role model for change, but also a predatory power exploiting China, was also rather neglected.

The introduction notes the long-term and short-term factors at work in leading to the fall of the Qing. The appeal and promise of the GMD is set against the Qing's perceived inability to reform effectively. There is an extensive and thoughtful conclusion which takes a broad overview. Mid Level 5.

Many candidates were able to deploy a range of detailed knowledge concerning Chiang Kai-shek's successes and failures in his attempts to restore effective central government to China in the years 1926-37. On the one hand students recognised that Chiang should be justly credited with defeating the Northern Warlords during the Northern Expedition of 1926-28, with modernisation projects to improve communication across the country, and with improving relationships between China and the rest of the world, leading to greater government revenue from tariffs. Indeed, some students went further, arguing that for most of the 'decade of stability' Chiang's successes persuaded many within China that the new leader enjoyed the Mandate of Heaven. On the other hand candidates pointed to his neglect of the peasants, Chiang's prioritisation of defeating the CCP rather than the Japanese, the outrage caused by the treaty of Tanggu, the perceived trivialness of the New Life Movement, and the fact that the scale of reforms was not great enough to sustain support for the regime in the long run. Some of the best answers pointed out some of the ambiguities of Chiang's rule – appearing to stamp out Communism initially after the Shanghai massacre, only for it to survive and re-emerge stronger after the Long March; and creating the New Life Movement, which could be seen as a sign of national renewal, or as an admission that Chiang was merely rooted in the past and had run out of ideas. At lower levels, students described some of these issues, without analysing how factors such as the improvement of China's infrastructure or relations with other nations affected the effectiveness of government. At the higher levels, candidates examined many of these factors, analysing their impact on Chiang's success and reaching an overall judgement which directly answered the question.

The introduction withholds judgement on the 'Nanjing Decade'. The answer suggests that Chiang's achievements were only moderately successful and investigates a wide range of relevant points in considerable detail. A secure evaluation overall. Mid Level 5.

Most candidates were able to write appropriately about the human disaster of the famine, attributing blame to specific aspects of the Great Leap Forward: disruption caused by establishing the communes, Lysenkoism and the culture of lying by the statisticians. Fewer candidates knew the chronology of the plan in enough detail to explain that the effects worsened after a reasonable start in 1958; or the regional variations in terms of natural disasters with drought in the north and floods in the south, adding to the self inflicted damage of the misguided policies.

In terms of industrial impact candidates were generally less secure, though the failure of backyard furnaces in raising good quality steel production was well known, as was the impact of focusing communal attention on this at the expense of agriculture. The withdrawal of Russian technical aid half way through the plan might have been given more attention.

To their credit, some candidates sought to analyse the question further by looking for possible benefits that certain social groups might have derived from the plan, but this was no easy task in an area where the impact was overwhelmingly negative for most people. Communal life may have brought some advantages depending on what it replaced and the creation of Tiananmen Square improved life for some in Beijing, but otherwise the fact that the details of the famine were not admitted until 1980 says it all.

(This page is for your first answer.) Mao Zedong started the Great Leap (GLF) & with the supposed intention of eatthing the west in terms of agricultural and industrial production in order to prove his paver and communist regime many historians have argued this was not a chiefed and the GIF and in was indeed catastrophe for the the Cherlel people, authough some to suggest small arguements oan be seen athemise man's GLF was focused on the peasants of china, was made up the majority of the pop country's population and these are the people we can see to of LF had the greatest effect on. A great indictity of the failings of the GIF, perhaps the most important was the famine that occurred in 1960 union resulted estimated 45 mill deaths of people peasants in China made up o causes the famine was been suggested was the lysentions Poods failures and methods of the GLFA Lisento style farming adopted by mao hindered the yield

(This page is for your first answer.) and so the agricultural production was dramatically decreased moreover moo's concenbation obsession with the production of stell in backyard furnaces meant orops were neglected and again contributed to the standion of so many deaths across the country's a ella failings for the chinese people moreover, unether failing or indicateor of the costustropic effect the GLF hold on chinese people was the tose o loss of family life and nurture seen in the communes set up by 1900 in 1966 in prepartion for the orly and push for unrealistic production levels Family life was destroyed as men and women slept in seperate doymitoris and onlider were raised in creches and so a mother across the country had lost their maternal role which is a catastrophe for many people in china at that time-gave little incentic to work / Furthermore, the chinese unoan population greatly under one regime of as they too suffered for from food shortages and had to we in work units. Havever some arguements can be seen to say that the GLF was not a complete catastrophe for the Chinese people. For perance instance industrial production had in encreased by 9%, authough they did not meet their gastronomical tourgets, this or increase was large and meant in one way the economy was improving conceavently the CIF was not a complete catabrophe for all chinese people in addition, employment of enviese people was extremely nigh and so chinese people benefitted from having a job and earlistent wage Authough the workers were extreme poorly poud and that jobs wor ob often not skilled. and so workers still old suffer from the employment they were in moreaer, it would also be argued the GIF was not a complete certastrophe for all chinese people as some

The answer notes the catastrophic effects of the Great Leap Forward for rural China, referring to the famine and the development of the communes. The impact on the cities is less secure. There is an attempt to frame a balanced argument, but this is not entirely persuasive and might have benefited from more detailed information. An analytical shape to the answer: mid Level 4.

The question lent itself to an analytical approach, with many candidates taking the opportunity to balance the motive of political control against other possible motives. For many this proved easier for the Cultural Revolution, where less ambiguity surrounds Mao's actions, but most candidates were also able to support arguments which could explain the Hundred Flowers campaign. The best answers were those that related the campaigns to wider contextual knowledge, bringing in the actions of key individuals (especially in 1966), ideological debates about the nature of the revolution and external issues (notably relations with the Soviet Union). Doing this of course did require accurate knowledge of the chronology and the specific developments of the two periods in question.

It could be argued that the Main reasons for camping these out were in order for him to regain Strengthen his political control but there here also other factors due to his ideological beliefs & Wort for help in bringing in rew Campaigns. It could be argued that Mas brought in both the hundred flowers comparign and cultural Revolution in order to ind himself of apposition from intellectuals and nightists. The answer considers both the Hundred Flowers movement and the Cultural Revolution together, and provides a sharp focus on Mao's determination to maintain his own power. A well detailed evaluation, which is perhaps more persuasive on the Cultural Revolution. Mid Level 5.

Some candidates attempted Question 5 without grasping that 'system of government' referred to the political system and went on to write irrelevantly about economic modernisation or the 1905 Revolution. Another common error was to spend too long describing how Alexander II had changed the political system before 1881, when it would have been better to have made selective use of this knowledge to highlight the repressive nature of Alexander III's regime after 1881. While many candidates knew that Alexander III had tightened central control, reduced the powers of the zemstva and persecuted the non-Russian peoples of the empire, they had difficulty making their knowledge relevant to what the question was asking. Obviously the Duma, Fundamental Law and subsequent electoral changes lay at the core of this question and many candidates were able to make some attempt to evaluate how much change was made in reality. The overwhelming consensus was to argue that change was indeed limited, although there was scope to discuss the advance in terms of parliamentary practice (such as the development of committees) and the constructive legislation (land reform and social insurance) that was passed before 1914.

The answer is a confident and focused response to the question. The candidate makes interesting and persuasive links between Witte's economic reforms and the stability of Tsarism. The Dumas are investigated in detail, and the answer concludes that these do not represent a dramatic break with the past. An assured evaluation: high Level 5.

Candidates appeared comfortable with Question 6 and most were able to weigh Lenin's contribution to Bolshevik success against the various other factors, usually the weaknesses or mistakes of the Provisional Government. There were some misconceptions about Lenin's popularity (Eisenstein would have been gratified to read of the huge crowds greeting Lenin on his return to the Finland Station, and of his rapport with the peasantry). Better informed candidates emphasised the importance of cultivating the Petrograd Soviet as the Bolshevik power base and ending the initial period of its cooperation with the Provisional Government. The automatic appeal of 'peace, bread and land' was exaggerated in many weaker answers, with some believing that mass support was the means by which the Bolsheviks seized power. There were however, some telling references to Lenin's twist on Marxist ideology to show how he accelerated the revolution, rather than waiting for the bourgeois revolution of March to run its course. In terms of Provisional Government mistakes, the obvious disadvantage of continuing to perform badly in the war and the counterproductive impact of releasing and arming the Bolsheviks during the Kornilov episode were frequently used well. However, few candidates seemed aware that there were two separate Provisional Governments during this period, led by Prince Lvov and Alexander Kerensky respectively. Candidates who emphasised that it was Lenin's success in persuading the Bolshevik Central Committee to act, in order to pre-empt both the convening of the All-Russian Congress of Soviets and Constituent Assembly elections, were able to argue more convincingly in support of the stated factor. Of the other individuals whose contributions were assessed, Trotsky received most attention but candidates with poor chronology often went on to include actions he took after the seizure of power, which were not relevant.

The answer might have benefited from a more straightforward chronological approach: to begin with considering the timing of the revolution leads to a lack of overall clarity. There is plenty of information on the Bosheviks and their organisation, but less on the difficulties faced by the Provisional Government. There is an assumption that Lenin gained considerable support among the peasants, though the results of the Constituent assembly elections would suggest otherwise. An analytical response, with sufficient development for mid Level 4.

The answer relates to the question and has some understanding of the key issues raised. The candidate notes the weaknesses of the Provisional Government, especially the division of power with the Petrograd Soviet. There is some lack of clarity on the Kornilov affair, though this is linked with the growing power and influence of the Bolsheviks. The state of the countryside has some relevance, but links to the question are not strong. The analysis is supported by largely accurate material, which makes for Level 4. However, the candidate barely mentions the given factor, so low Level 4 is preferred.

The question was about the outcomes of collectivisation, not its causes: these were not necessarily the same. There was some discussion on the campaign against the kulaks and the climate of fear that accompanied it, linking this to wider economic outcomes of feeding the industrial workforce of the Five-Year Plans. The role of the MTS in enforcing continued control was less well covered but the fact that collectivisation was enforced against the will of its opponents was testament to the control it helped Stalin to establish over the countryside. Surprisingly, some candidates omitted to mention the famine, especially the Ukrainian Holodomor, as an outcome, although this was relatively rare. Stalin's strengthened political position was well known and many explained that criticisms of collectivisation polarised opinion inside the Communist Party, enabling Stalin to isolate his right wing rivals Bukharin, Kirov and Rykov. On an ideological level, better informed candidates used their knowledge of the Twenty Five Thousand to explain how the spirit of Bolshevism was finally being exported to the countryside to establish the smychka (in propaganda claims at least).

The answer notes how collectivisation imposed Communist control on the countryside through the creation of the collective farm and the attack on the kulaks (which created a climate of fear and therefore of obedience among the peasants). Other outcomes which are addressed include the freeing up of a large pool of labour to work in the cities, and the short-term destabilisation of the economy. A well argued evaluative answer; high Level 5.

Question 8

The majority of students approached this question with confidence, producing answers which considered a range of factors. At the highest levels, candidates applied detailed and specific own knowledge to support their points. For example, they could employ statistics to show the impact of lend-lease, they knew the impact of the Third Five-Year Plan, and they were aware of specific battles and campaigns. Some candidates believed that the three Five-Year Plans had set the USSR up as a finely honed fighting machine for which the Germans were no match: the reality was, of course, far more complex. In addition, at these levels, candidates were able to evaluate how these factors enabled the USSR to defeat Germany, making explicit reference to how each factor strengthened the Russian campaign. The best answers evaluated throughout, stating an overall judgement in the introduction, defending this judgement throughout the answer, and explaining it in the conclusion. For example, a number of candidates argued that the Russian Home Front was the most important factor, as it was the Russian people who maintained the war economy, which supplemented lend-lease, which enabled the Russians to capitalise on German mistakes. In addition, at the highest level, candidates engaged with the exact wording of the question, explaining why the war changed course after the defeats of 1941. At high levels there was some discriminating use of detail to highlight the comparative differences in the way Hitler and Stalin handled their economic priorities (Germany keeping up living standards at the cost of full economic mobilisation, unlike Russia where consumer goods were never prioritised) and their military leaders (Hitler interfering, while Stalin gave Zhukov a free hand). The best answers conveyed a sense of change between 1941 and 1945 to show how the dynamics shifted in Russia's favour after a calamitous start to the campaign. These answers stressed the role of civilians on the Soviet home front who were already used to grim obedience. Many also referred to aspects of Stalin's pragmatism, such as relaxing his control on the Church and emphasising the war as a patriotic struggle.

Lower level answers were aware of the need to discuss a range of factors. However, these candidates did not have the detailed own knowledge necessary to reach the higher levels. Their examples were often generalised, showing a basic grasp of the topic, but no more. Additionally, candidates at these levels made only implicit links to the question. For example, they may have stated a factor, and provided some examples to support this, but then they did not explain how this factor helped the USSR to defeat Germany.

Despite the disasters that Statin and Russia faced in World War Two, they were able to dejeat Nasi Germany for a number of different reasons, those included the Nazi failures, Russia's economic Situation, the triple alliance and the Policy of Lend-Lease it seems that a mixture of those factors led to the success of the USSR.

A main reason for the USSR victory in world wor two was the Nazi weaknesses. Firstly, thitler was everconjitaint and interfered with his segeneral's decisions, meaning they did not always do the correct thing because thitler was not a Strategist. Question 9

Answers discussed a variety of factors which lead to changes in the position of African Americans in the decade following the Second World War. Most students were able to describe, in some detail, several contributing factors including the measures of President Truman, the campaigns of the NAACP, and the changes brought about by the Second World War. Moreover, they were often able to consider different aspects of the War, the economic revival it brought about, the way in which it precipitated a wave of migration from South to North, the impact of the revelations concerning Nazi racism, the role of black servicemen and the GI Bill of Rights. A small number of students went beyond the period specified to discuss Kennedy's role, the campaigns of the 1960s and in some cases black power. Equally, a few conflated the Federal Government with Civil Rights groups, with some perhaps overstating Truman's role. However, far more stuck to the period deploying a range of detailed and accurate knowledge, and at the higher levels analysed their relative contribution to the legal, economic and social change witnessed in the period.

The second World War was an enormous turning point in the # African Americans
The Second World War was an enormous turning point in the $ African Americans (that lived in the North) Striggle for freedom. For many Black Americans Athe war gave them the opportunity to (for the first time) experience segregation of $ Over 1.2 million Black soldier lought in the war and expenence segregation & 8 Over 1.2 million Black soldier lought in the war and experienced countries in Europe without segregation and realised they weren't prepared to fight for a country that couldn't even treat them fairly. African Americans created the Darble V' Sign, for Victory at home afrom segregation and discomination) and victory abroad (to be free from the racist apponent - Hitler).
The Second World War definitely improved the lives of African American in the year 1945-1955. After fighting in the war, black soldiers were more confident and wanted recognition for their bravery. For example, a black pilot, Woodrow Crockett. He flew 149 missions in the last year of the wour and not one plane in his squadron was shortdown. It was black heroes like these that gave campaigners confidence and brought sympathy from white Americans who felt gruity about meaning them badly in the past.
The Second World War showed how homific racism could be. After the way people were more willing to bring about equality when they saw things like the extermination camps and saw what terrible things could come from racism. Americans know there white Americans started to support equality because of this and became more

(This page is for your first answer.) Sumpathetic. The war was important for America's economy. The war itself had created thousands of jobs in the industry to that by the end of the war, unumployment Wate had plummeted from 937,000 to 151,000. In addition many African Americans had moved to the North during the war so in the years after they were receiving to better wages (however these were only half the amount whites received) and could therefore server better homes. However many blacks after the war were forced to live in ghettos. In Washington D. C. 40% of housing anculable to black Americans was sub-standowd. This was only 12% for whites Additionally in the years following the war 61% of Black Americans were trying in urban areas in ghettos torover, in the North, there was no legal segregation so blacks recemed less discrimination. By moving to the North, after the war blacks received discumunation more blacks were able to vote, they were paid more than their previous agricultural work and were generally better organised. e.g. A. Philip Randolph created the Brotherhood of Sleaping Cour Porters By fighting in the second World War weterans, anothesoldiers and returned to America determined to confidence increased fight racial injustice. However when white Americans saw this merease in confidence, the number of lynchings mareased. The second World War caused an increase in the Ky Klux Klan's achous It could be argued that the only neason African Muricoun's (This page is for your first answer.) wes improved was because of the campoughs. Between 1945 and 1955 there were a son's of campaigns that were extremeley important for the civil rights movement. For example in 1946 Morgan vs. Virginia. This was important as it highlighted there was severe expregation on mtentate buses. This and case made segregation on interstate buses illegal however do jure change did not result in de facto change Many bus companies ignored the nuling. This was chain in 1947 by covet's Journey of Reconciliation. The activists were anoted and proved that defacto change was shill to come In the early 1950's campaigns began to focuson education; as it was believed it was easy to show that separate but equal was not being practised and that by giving Back americans better education, they could have better lives. The 1950 Sweat is Painter case was the starting pant (Brown is board of topeka) Then in 1954 the Brain case was highly significant proving where the Supreme Court miled you can not separate and 'equal'. This was groundbreaking in the CVI rights campaigns as it gave Black Americans even more confidence to fight for freedom through the Courts. Lawyers like Thurgood Marshall Showed persistence & fighting through the courts could be successful However We Marger vo Vivginia, de facto change was slaw and this was the cause of the Brown 11 case in 1955 I think the second World War was clearly chi'cal in

(This page is for your first answer.) going leople were the better paid jobs and confidence however the campaigns in this time (1945-55) were chical to the improvement to the lives of African Minericans. On the other hand, it could be said that these campaigns didn't really help at all as defacts change was so slaw for instance, after the Brain is Board of Topeka case only 750 out of 6,300 school districts desegnedated:

Other campaigns that improved the lines of black Americans were in 1947 the in New Orleans, acrivists blocked the entrancos to department stores. This type of protest was effective as it was simple and quickly spread throughout the country inaddition the UDL bus boycott in 1951 with Operation free Litt' However this was not very effective as it did not last long enough to get moduli attention or damage the company's finances. An effective company was the CNO's in Akansas - the voier registration campaign who have as the company is finances.

It could be said that the second World War was not the main reason for & the improvement 1 It could be argued that it was all down to President Trumoun the first President openly committed to CMI rights Sinco Cincoln. His 1947 export To secure Those Rights' was his attempt at sorting out the problems.

We also used his power to appoint people to important places. E.g.

Truman also desegregated the armed forces, Dulles Airport restaurant and his mangaration speech was infact of a desegnegated crowd. Overall, it is clear that the second world war had acroll it definitely show that a clearly positive effect on black Americans wes in the years 1945-55. It showed them explored what a country without segregation could be like and the dangers inherent in vacism . It gave them now jobs and better wages and a better e conony Most importantly it gave them confidence to succood from though white racists were still dearly present, for example lynching increased and the Detroit mot of 1943, this only moude black Americans more determined. The second world Now was a turning point in peoples attitudes towards blacks flowever the war wasn't the only reason for improvement All the campaigns and efforts of activists braight about Change in transport, education and public areas however to de forcto change was dow but pragness was still being made. Hearts It has to be said though that those campaigns probably wouldn't have happened without the war. Those campaigns were also important because campaigness learnt from them - for example CORES bus boyport - activists Learn't they had to make future baycotts longer.

(This page is for your first answer.) Findly another reason for improving black Americans were was their devoted fromdent.

Thurnan even though his plans and ideas were (acking funds & Shimped by Congress, ho sim managed to desegregate so much to parlaps most importantly the armed renness.

In cancusion the second world war was critical in improving black Americans lives however this wouldn't have been possible without the President and the ferristance of Court campaigners e.g. Thursgood Marshall and Companyons e.g. Thursgood Marshall and Companyons e.g. Thursgood Marshall

The answer has a strong focus on the question. The candidate investigates the impact of the war on the status of African Americans, considering both the serving soldiers and those who gained employment in defence industries. Other factors are noted, notably the campaigns of the early 1950s, and the support given by Truman in 'To Secure These Rights'. More might have been made of the role of the NAACP, but a strong evaluation overall; mid Level 5.

Stronger candidates understood that this question required analysis of a range of factors that contributed to the successes of the civil rights movement. They considered factors such as Presidential support, the media and support from white people. In addition, they understood that the question allowed them to focus on peaceful protests not directly connected to King. The strongest answers had two characteristics. First, they linked the factors discussed to specific achievements – that is to say, they showed exactly how these factors led to the successes of the civil rights movement. Secondly, they drew links between the factors discussed, and used these links to reach a judgement about which factor was most important. For example, a number of candidates argued that the most important reason for successes was federal government support, as only the federal government had the power to enforce desegregation. Answers at this level showed a confident grasp of a range of protests and achievements.

Weaker candidates produced more limited responses. Some candidates misunderstood the requirements of the question and produced answers assessing the strengths and weaknesses of peaceful protest, with no reference to other factors. Others wrote only about peaceful protest and Black Power, making no attempt to make the latter relevant to the question set. Many candidates knew only a limited number of protests: the Montgomery Bus Boycott, the March on Washington, and the Birmingham Campaign. This restricted the scope of their answer. Finally, at the lowest levels, candidates described a couple of protests, focusing more on the narrative of those protests than on the question set. In these answers, there was no attempt at analysis.

Future candidates are advised to learn not only the narrative of the civil rights movement, but also how to analyse this narrative and adapt their knowledge to meet the demands of specific questions.

Question 11

Candidates generally knew more about Kennedy than Eisenhower in escalating US involvement in SE Asia. Some struggled to focus on the actions of the two presidents and wrote about their motives for being involved, while others sought to twist the question by comparing Eisenhower/Kennedy with Truman before and Johnson afterwards. However, stronger candidates commented accurately on the increasing use of 'advisors' and provision of equipment, relating the escalation to explanations of developments in the USA and in Vietnam itself which influenced presidential thinking. Many candidates expressed the legitimate difficulty in judging Kennedy given the doubts surrounding his future intentions when he was assassinated.

Question 12

Most candidates were able to explain several reasons why obtaining "Peace with Honour" took such a long time and were aware that Nixon followed a dual strategy combining diplomacy with wider military action. Candidates tended to know more about this military action than the diplomacy, and perhaps overlooked the impact of the Sino – Soviet split on Nixon's actions. However, the domestic context of student unrest, while Nixon preferred to listen more to the views of the "silent majority", was picked up by many as an additional delaying factor.

In the process the answer builds up a clear picture of why it took Nixon so long to bring the war to an honourable close. Mid Level 5.

Question 13

The question presented no problems of interpretation and there were some impressively wide ranging and detailed answers that addressed the many policy areas that Carter struggled in – economic, political, cultural, social and foreign with stronger answers able to show which factors had greatest impact in the immediate run up to the election. The perceived appeal of Reagan was well documented. The best candidates could categorise the factors thematically without losing sight of the chronology, while at the other extreme were answers that listed factors without explaining their impact.

Question 14

Question 14 was rarely done at all, and tended to attract generalised answers that could have applied to feminism and gay rights anywhere in the west.

The answer considers a good range of factors, mostly on Carter's difficulties during his term of office. Problems with Congress and different social groups are assessed, along with his economic failings. The answer notes the importance of Ronald Reagan, but only considers his sunny personality rather than addressing his policies. A good evaluation overall: low Level 5.

Paper Summary
Those candidates who were well prepared in terms of knowledge and understanding of their topics produced answers within Levels 4 and 5, and some of these have been included in this report. For students who completed GCSE just one year earlier, the best answers are remarkable examples of young minds at work.
