With more than two million visitors a year, tourism is an important source of income for the Broads' economy with money spent in restaurants, pubs, souvenir and specialist shops as well as on accommodation and boating. Tourism supports over 3000 jobs.

Visitors are attracted to the Broads for its unique wetland landscape and to take part in recreational activities on land and water including sailing, motor-boating, rowing, canoeing, fishing, walking and bird-watching. Adrenalin seekers go waterskiing or wakeboarding where the skier rides the wake (or wave) generated by the ski boat.

Boating is at the heart of the culture of the Broads and supports a number of private sector organisations including boatyards, retailers, hire companies and pleasure cruise operators. All boats on the Broads are required to pay a daily toll which helps towards maintaining the riverbanks and dredging the waterways to prevent silting.

The increasing number of motor boats and skiers on the Broads has created problems for the fragile environment and other users of the waterways. There have been complaints about excessive wake, created by the high speeds of boats, damaging the riverbanks and increasing the deposit of silt and sediment. Anglers and nature lovers have complained about the noise.

The majority of people are Buddhist and religion is an important feature in everyday life. Forests cover over a quarter of the country and in 1961 the National Park Act was passed to protect Thailand's natural resources. These National Parks are home to tigers, leopards, bears and monkeys. Elephants are a symbol of Thailand but their numbers have fallen drastically due to their natural habitat being lost through deforestation.

Thailand Adventure Holiday – Khao Sok National Park, Thai Hill Tribes

We experience the warm hospitality of Thailand's hill tribe people, go elephant riding, bamboo rafting, canoeing and jungle walking, before rounding off the adventure with time to chill out amidst the spectacular limestone scenery, sandy beaches and secluded bays of Krabi.

How this holiday makes a difference

This trip takes travellers out into the wilderness of both north and south Thailand. Beginning with a trek to a remote tribal area to the north of Chiang Mai we meet and learn about a variety of hill tribe groups, such as the Lisu and Shan people. Staying with villagers in their bamboo huts, our small group visits are carefully controlled to help distribute revenue from tourism without destroying the local tradition. In Khao Sok National Park we stay on locally owned rathouses, go wildlife spotting with local guides and learn about life in a lake community by visiting small fishing villages.

Travellers are briefed on the importance of respecting local culture and being environmentally responsible, e.g. not leaving behind litter or toilet paper, using biodegradable soaps and shampoos and wearing appropriate dress.

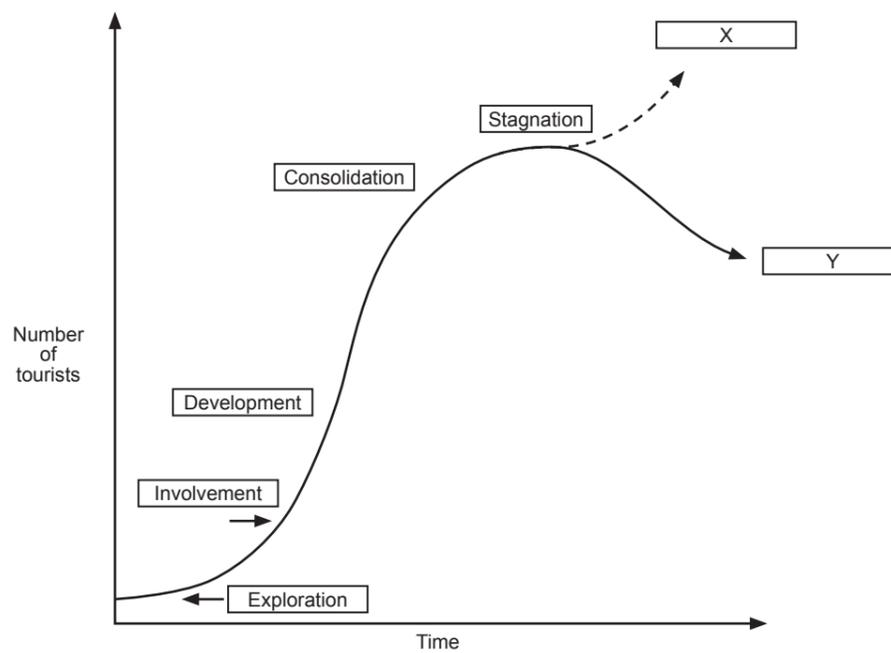

Throughout the trip we use local guides and porters who are often from the villages we are visiting. All activities are organised directly through local people, e.g. we take bamboo rafts on the river which are bought from a local village and go on an elephant trek which financially benefits a small elephant camp.
