- 2 Ian's social worker is called Philip. As with many social workers, Philip's caseload is substantial and he finds his working day is getting longer.

Despite the challenges, Philip enjoys his job as he is part of a large team whose members come from other professions. However, one of the biggest constraints Philip experiences is limited financial resources.

Over the past two years Philip and Ian have developed a trusting relationship. Ian enjoys Philip's annual monitoring visits.

- (a) Philip's annual monitoring visits with Ian provide an ideal time to review Ian's care plan.

Explain the importance of monitoring Ian's care plan.

(2)

- (b) Philip listens attentively and discusses all aspects of Ian's care with him. He believes that this is important as it promotes service user empowerment.

Explain why empowerment is important to effective care planning and provision.

(4)

(c) Philip believes in involving Ian in all aspects of his care.

Explain the benefits of involving service users in the care planning stage.

- 3 Ian is now classified as disabled. The legislation that covered Ian was the Disability and Discrimination Act 1995, which was repealed and replaced by the Equality Act 2010.

Despite the introduction of this legislation, Ian still faces significant problems when getting out and about. For example, there is only one taxi service in his town that can facilitate his wheelchair. Ian has raised this at the weekly Chest, Heart and Stroke support group sessions. Many of the other service users who attend the support group have also experienced similar barriers.

- (a) Explain the importance of the Equality Act 2010 in preventing discrimination.

(b) Explain the barriers people with disabilities face when accessing services in society.
