We hear talk of a government in far-away Washington that desires the welfare of all.

We hear it wants to help us with its Agricultural Adjustment Act, but we 5 are too far down the social ladder for government to reach us. In the South, the AAA is run by the landowners we have known all our lives, on behalf of the white man, forming a wall between us and the 10 government. So, we are leaving! We are angry no more!

We take one last look at the landowner's house, and feel glad that we are leaving.
For years, we have heard that, all over 15
the world, men are leaving the land for the city, so we are leaving too.

Our hearts are glad as we move northward. What emotions we feel as,
from the train, we glimpse the sliding 20 waters of the Ohio. It is more than a river.

It is a symbol, a line running through our hearts, dividing hope from despair,
just as once it cut through the nation, dividing freedom from slavery. The miles 25 stretch behind us. Into Chicago, New York, Pittsburgh we go, looking for work.
We feel freer than we have ever felt, but we are still a little scared. Timidly, we leave the train and board our first bus in 30 the North. We have been told we can sit where we please, but we are still scared.

Our eyes cloud with bewilderment when we learn that there are not enough houses for us to live in. And competing 35 with us for shelter are thousands of poor whites who have come up from the rural South, just as we have.

Gigantic companies will not employ our daughters as clerks; huge department 40 stores will not employ our young women as saleswomen.

Technical colleges refuse entry to our sons and great corporations refuse to employ them. Bosses decide that we must be porters, cooks and general servants. 45

We countryfolk now live behind the factories, beside steel mills, next to coal yards. White people say we are destructive, and therefore do not want us in their neighbourhoods. They say our presence lowers the value of their property. 50

Boards of education twist the boundary lines of school districts so that our children are legally 'jim-crowed'. Local governors reduce services in our districts: our streets go unlit at night;
rubbish piles up in our alleyways;
pavements fall into disrepair. 55 60

SOURCE 2: From a weblog by Nicholas Jones, published 7 February 2017.

Jones was a BBC industrial and political correspondent during the 1980s. He was named industrial journalist of the year in 1986 for his coverage of the miners' strike. Here he reflects on the role of Arthur Scargill, President of the National Union of Mineworkers.

Battle of Orgreave – a violent confrontation between miners on strike and the police

Arthur Scargill relied on his union's industrial strength, but he was a naturally skilled communicator who had mastered the challenges posed by radio and television.

He enlivened strike rallies across the coalfields with speeches regularly interrupted by cheering and applause. His status as the strikers' hero unnerved the news media. Most national newspapers sided strongly with Margaret Thatcher during the pit dispute, and mutual hostility fed through into much of the broadcast coverage. 10

Scargill challenged that established order, mounting highly personalised attacks on political leaders, making arguments that made a positive impact on his target audiences. He connected in a language that his supporters understood. When addressing rallies, he succeeded in strengthening their sense of grievance by personally blaming the journalists in their midst for the constant hostility shown by mainstream media. 15 20 25

He seized every opportunity to attack journalists, interviewers and presenters for being biased against the miners, and for always siding with Mrs Thatcher.

His aim was to convince miners and their families that the media were part of an establishment conspiracy to assist the new National Coal Board chairman in his plan to close loss-making collieries. 30

Scargill was praised by supporters and opponents alike for the speed with which he had become a household name. He was at ease in front of camera, always dominating proceedings. He had mastered the technicalities. In June 1984, at the height of the struggle between picketing miners and the police, he was commissioned by Channel 4 News to prepare his own filmed report outlining the case against pit closures. 35 40 45

Scargill took full advantage of the opportunity, and, to his great satisfaction, his report was ready for transmission on the day of the Battle of Orgreave*.

After allegedly staging an injury during that day's massive Police operation, he ended up spending the night under observation in hospital. That evening Channel 4 News showed a bedside interview with Scargill and then showed Scargill's filmed report. The presenter, Peter Sissons, ended the news item with the ultimate tribute, 'That report was by Arthur Scargill'.

I asked if he found it difficult to memorise what he wanted to say to camera.

'You mean my voice-over during the walk-in shot? Oh, that was easy.'

Scargill had mastered the jargon of television news production – 'walk-in shot', 'voice-over' – faster than some union leaders memorised their own rule book.
