Question 1

Christian families were an essential part of Franco's political ideology; motherhood became the central aspect of female identity, which was strongly encouraged by the Catholic Church.

Many publications promoted the idea that, in these homes, peace and order were maintained, thanks to the talents of the mothers who were extremely hard-working. If women planned their daily tasks properly, it was possible to organise a dozen children, without any difficulty and without losing their smile.

A mother did not have set working hours nor employment rights, which perhaps has not changed much since those days. Her day almost always would have begun very early and ended quite late.
