

Provisional Reading List for History Advanced Extension Award

The purpose of the History Advanced Extension Award is not to enable you to learn more information about a particular historical period. Rather, the exam encourages you to build on what you already know and think more critically about the nature and practice of historical scholarship in general. Most students will prepare for this exam by reading a few scholarly articles and books, and then reflecting on their contents. This practice will help better prepare you for university studies and will enhance your understanding of the other exam units that you are being taught.

The list below is intended as a guide only. Students should not attempt to read everything and indeed they are encouraged to select a few key items only. Many items will be available in your school library, through interlibrary loan, on the internet, through online second-hand bookshops or in the local library near to your house.

Hints for General Research on Unfamiliar Historical Topics

Basic information on historical terms, events and key individuals can be located in historical dictionaries, dictionaries and encyclopaedias. Try www.historytoday.com for a useful online reference work. The Encyclopaedia Britannica is also a very good quick-access work of reference and it will probably be available in your school library or a local municipal library. Historical atlases are useful for brief overviews of a historical period, and provide historically accurate maps relevant to the period under study. An extensive bibliographical guide covering all periods of history from Palaeolithic times to the present is available on the Edexcel website (www.edexcel.org/uk)

BOOKS

A brief selection only is given. Your teacher may recommend one to begin with. Through most of the items listed, other key works can be identified if necessary through bibliographies and footnotes. The Bentley or Jordanova are good places to start; they are available in paperback and don't cost too much (use Amazon.co.uk to acquire). If you are thinking of studying history at university, be brave and dip into one of these – especially if you are going to have an interview.

Interpretations and Examinations of Historiography on Specific Topics

The following articles reinterpret events or the impact and role of individuals in history. Choose one or two of them to read and see how historians interpret evidence differently. It may facilitate your understanding if you choose an article about an area of history you know about. However, you can easily look up basic details about individuals and events in an encyclopaedia before reading the articles.

History and Film

Should movie makers produce historically accurate films, or excellent entertainment? Is it possible to combine both? Decide by watching the films and 'featurettes' of some of the following available on DVD: Mona Lisa Smile (history of women and education); Good Night, and Good Luck (America in the 1950s); Downfall [the last days of Hitler's life]
