Why choose the Diploma sized qualification?

The BTEC Level 1 Diploma in Health and Social Care provides a comprehensive introduction to the sector and is appropriate for students who have a clear intention to work within care related industries. By studying the diploma, students will secure a strong foundation of knowledge and skills in preparation for higher level learning.

Pearson offers both the Award and Certificate sized qualifications in Health and Social Care for students who wish to study the subject in less depth due to their learning needs and/or the make-up of their wider learning programme. The Award for example provides a brief introduction, whereas the Certificate provides a broader coverage of the sector. The Diploma is significantly larger in size (37 Credits) than the Certificate (13 credits) and the Award (7 Credits). The different sizes will determine the depth and breadth of sector knowledge and skills covered.

The Diploma is for those students with a clear intention of progressing into employment in the sector. Whereas the Certificate and Award allow for study of additional subjects for those students who may want to have a more mixed programme giving them experience of more than one sector ahead of choosing one for further study or training. Students may wish to study Health and Social Care alongside other vocational or academic qualifications, in these instances, students should consider either the Award or Certificate as alternatives.

Some students will consider the smaller sized qualifications to allow additional time to be spent on securing English and Mathematics skills, so that they are prepared to progress to the next stage.

Students should consider the appropriate sized qualification according to their learning needs and their intended progression destination.
