Seth Clark

Seth Clark a designer and artist whose work focuses on decayed and deteriorating architecture.

He creates these collapsing structures through layering of different mediums to show the complexity of decay and disorder.

I like how Seth Clark seamlessly blends different mediums together to create a piece of art. His work is somehow decayed and messy but also neat, showing disorder and order.

Diego Max
 is a Brazilian artist
 who blends together art
 and anatomy.

His work shows the
 disorder and chaosness
 of the mind. He uses paint, and old pictures
 or adverts to create this effect.

I like how all the bright seemingly random items are blended and brought together in order.

These are my experiments of distorting the face like Diego Max does. But instead of adding things to the face, I take away things to show the disorder of the face and the mind.

My mixed media piece in the style of Diego Max. I used water colour, charcoal and magazine cut outs to create this.

Agnes Toth tears away to show the chaos and disorder of people, or she selects certain pieces to show where people can work out what's happening.

It looks more torn than cut-out like I did before, so that's how I did my versions.

I took photos in different positions and teased certain sections of the photos selectively, to reveal part of the picture but not the whole story. There is order as you can tell the shape but disordered because you can't see everything.

The stencil on the left shows us in a collage of digital things that make us who we are, they're colorful and disorderly and the stencil itself is very clear and ordered. This one was on experience, but wasn't as successful as I hoped. The second stencil is more clear and worked more. The map is very colorful and represents the ability of where they live.
