David Bailey has long been one of the most famous commercial photographers in the world. He has worked for magazines and newspapers such as Vogue to the Daily Telegraph, photographing musicians and fashion models. Bailey is known for his iconic black and white shots of British rock bands, capturing a unique sense of style and energy. He is considered one of the key cultural figures from the world of pop music, literature and art history with a simple & dramatic style. It was reported that his approach was inspired by the social & free expression of working girls in dance bands. Bailey has continued to have a successful & high profile career as a photographer & film maker.

I like this image as there is a variety of colours and also I think the text works well. If I had to do it again I would change the font of the writing and also the colour as I don't think the grey works well. Another reason I like the image is because it's a fun pose.

I like the picture because I think how she is jumping gives a good effect, but the writing going around the image isn't very clear so next time I would put the text in a different place. Also the picture looks very natural.

I enjoyed doing the projectwork as I could be as creative as I wanted. Some of the images were very well and some not so well, but as they have been taken in the dark it gives the pictures more effect. The girl in the dark stood out the most as I really like the image where the girl is jumping against the brick wall. It gives a really natural effect and it's a fun pose which is interesting and different.

PHOTOGRAMS

I like this photogram as it is interesting one because of the objects I have used. I have used a piece of wire in this photogram. It creates a shadow of the objects. I think that the photogram itself

"Plaint-like photography, no life like a drawing or painting."

"Because of the changes in light, it makes it interesting like the tree isn't just one colour, it's different shades of green."

"Changes in light which gives the image effect."

"Not perfectly joined together which gives it a kind of 3D dimension."

Joiner photographs were invented by an artist called David Hockney. They are created by taking several photographs and overlapping them to create one large image.

PRACTICE 1.

I think this one turned out ok, as you can make out what it is. I think just a few more pictures need to be taken.

PRACTICE 2.

This one didn't turn out very well. I think more pictures needed to be taken.

Statement of Intent

For my final project, I am going to be doing a combination of Macro and Portraits. I will be taking pictures of people and taking pictures of their full body and close-ups of their face. I will be using a digital camera in this project. Firstly, I will photograph my friend both indoors and outdoors with a variety of backgrounds. Sherilu's work inspired me to do this. Her work is really interesting. They are simple shots that are taken but it looks very effective. Her work looks really good.

Image Analysis

The picture taken centered shots used rule of thirds and the head is more close to the picture. The lighting in the image is bright which leads to the image having a shadow which adds extra element to the image. The texture of the image is smooth and not too much focus on the picture. The photo size adds more interest as it gives the skin tone at some and adds to the fashion look shot produces. The choice of the background colour is blue, which is a calming colour so it's not drawing all your attention to the background but to the person.
