On this page I have recreated this childhood photograph of me and my friends. I did it in the style of Alberto Giacometti. I did it because I wanted to see if I could capture the human form in this style. I would then go on to mix people and bugs. I have decided to not continue with this idea because I don't think it is refined enough for what I want to achieve. I do however like the way I have copied aspects from Alberto Giacometti's original accurately like the sketchy lines and eyes. I am going to now continue to look at bugs on faces.

This is my second attempt at combining people and bugs. I chose this picture because it makes it look as if she is terrified of the bugs I added a tarantula to the scene to add more fear. I would like to do more pictures like this where the faces expressions connect with the type of bugs on them. This piece also shows lots of textures and colours from the facial features and from the bugs for a final piece idea I could combine two people with numerous bugs on their faces.

I have painted another portrait of my friend because I am using her in my final ideas I have therefore had another practice. I really like the colour and pattern on the cocada. I am thinking of adding it to a final piece. I am really pleased with the colour of the skin because I think it looks realistic. I also like the way the hair looks really textured. I am now going to do a painting of a man to see the similarities and differences.

I have decided that for one of my final piece ideas I will paint me and my friend. Doing a painting of people of the opposite sex would show another difference.

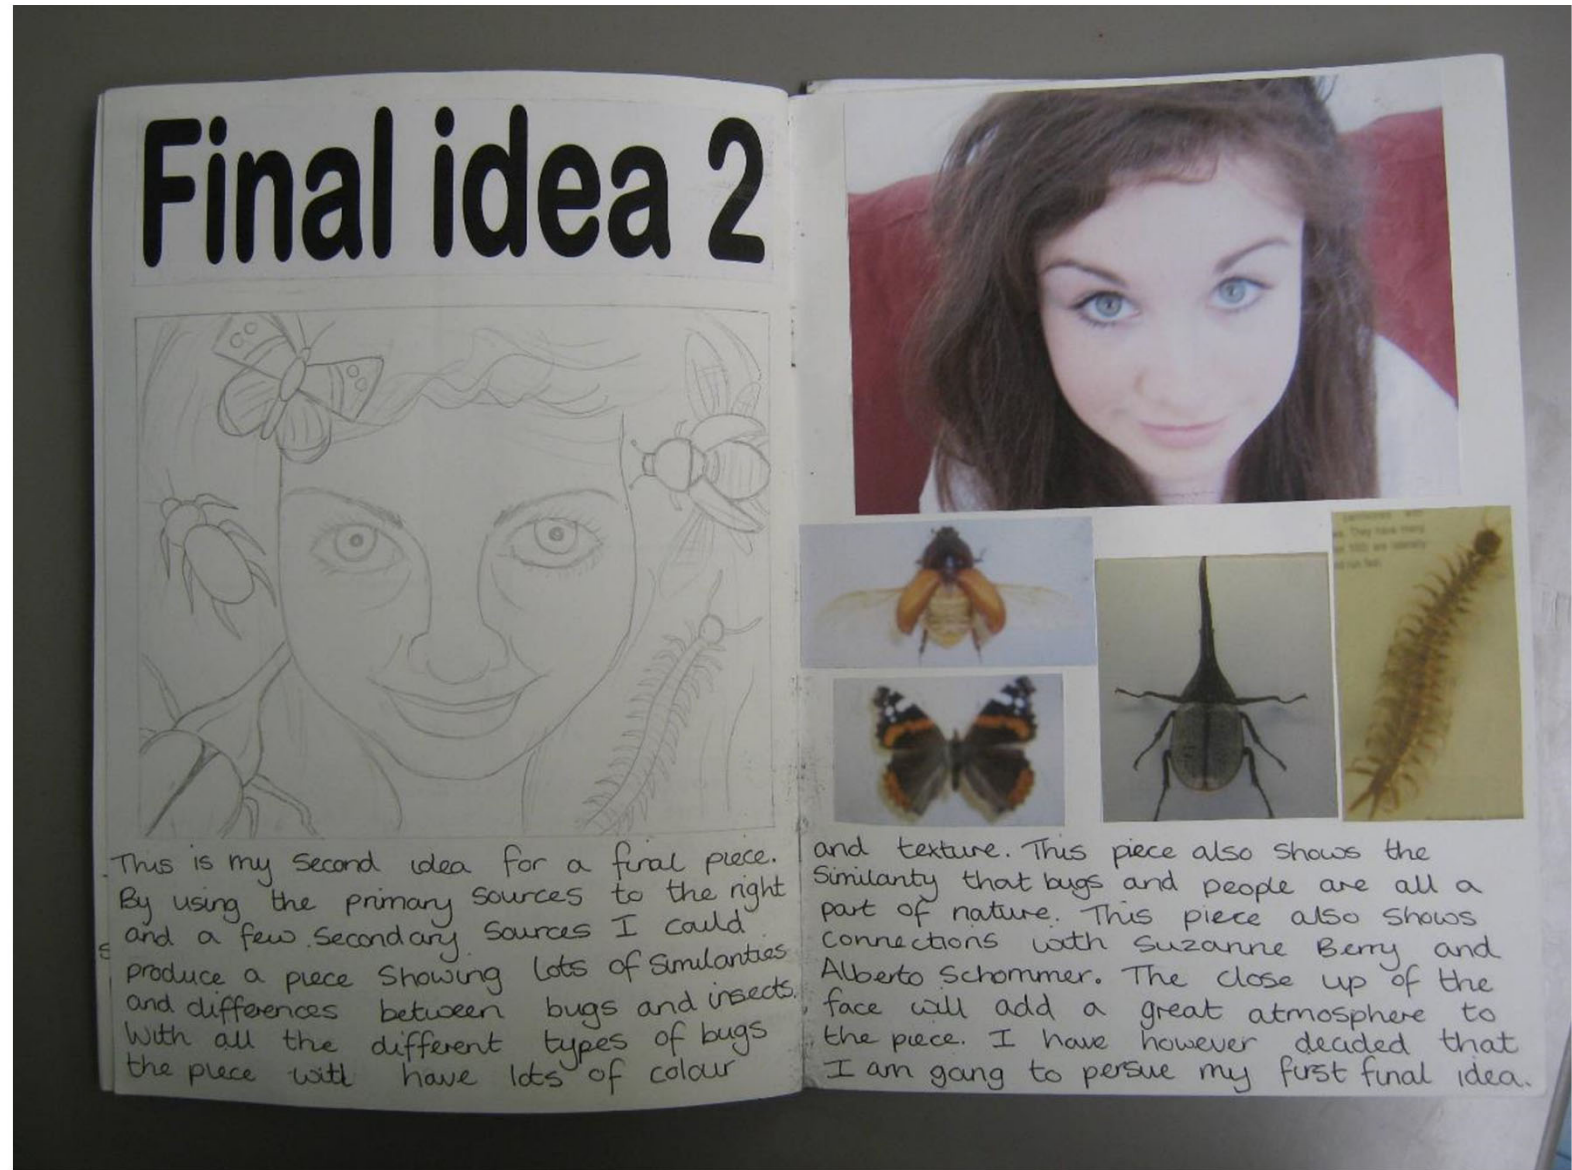

I made sure we put expressions on our faces so it would give the piece some character. As my friend's face seems quite peaceful I will put beautiful bugs on her like butterflies. I will put bugs like spiders and scorpions on me because my face looks more fearful. By combining certain pictures I could make the piece comical or serious.
