Source A: Reform to the benefits system

From April 2013, people who claim housing benefit but have a spare bedroom in their house face a cut in their housing benefit. This has been nicknamed the 'bedroom tax'.

Government ministers say this cut will knock £500 million off the housing benefit bill. However, some people argue this will unfairly affect people on low incomes and minority groups such as the disabled. This has led to claims that the 'bedroom tax' is a form of discrimination.

Source B: The UK and the European Union

In 2013, Prime Minister David Cameron promised a referendum on UK membership of the European Union in 2017.

Opinion polls have shown that 56% of people would like the UK to leave the European Union. Only 30% of people wanted the UK to stay in the European Union.

Membership of the European Union has long been a controversial issue in the United Kingdom. Some people believe that the UK would be better off not being in the European Union. Others believe that the European Union helps the UK economy.

If the UK votes to leave, it will be the first member state to ever leave the European Union.

Source C: Labour Party plans to help the unemployed

The Labour Party believes the unemployed should take a "basic skills test" for English and Maths. A spokeswoman said that this would help the long-term unemployed as they could then be offered extra training to help them get a job. She said "If you don't have these basic skills, you are going to struggle to get a job. If people have been out of work for six months, employers are not interested in them."

People who refuse to take the test would have their benefits stopped.

It is hoped that this will also prevent young people who leave school with few qualifications from going straight onto benefits. The Labour Party is also hoping to reduce government spending on unemployment, which cost almost £5 billion in 2012.

Source D: Smoking in prisons: whose rights?

A ban on prisoners smoking has been proposed in the UK. Smoking is already banned in young offender institutions.

People are sent to prison as a punishment for their crime. It has been argued that they should not face the additional punishment of a ban on smoking or a loss of their human rights.

Smoking in prison is a problem for the health of the prisoners who smoke, as well as the staff and non-smoking prisoners who are exposed to second-hand smoke.

Some newspapers in the UK have warned that a ban could lead to riots and would be difficult to enforce.

Source E: Pressure group activity

In September 2013, armed Russian guards stormed a Greenpeace ship and arrested the crew. Greenpeace was protesting against oil drilling in Russia's Arctic waters.

The protesters wanted to raise awareness of Russia's oil drilling activities in the Arctic.

Greenpeace claims that the Russian government interrupted their peaceful protest.

The Russian government said that the campaigners had been aggressive and threatening to the workers on an oil rig. All 30 members of Greenpeace were arrested and charged with piracy.

This led to international campaigns to free the "Arctic 30" as the protesters became known.

A United Nations committee ruled that Russia should release the Greenpeace campaigners and allow them to leave the country. The last of the campaigners was allowed to leave Russia at the end of December.
