TEXT 1

Extract from 'Wish you were here: 50 of the best holidays' by Judith Chalmers (1987).

In this edited extract published in a travel guide, Judith Chalmers, a British television presenter best-known for travel programmes, shares her views about visiting New York City.

The sight of that Manhattan skyline, whether it's for the first or hundredth time, always brings a kaleidoscope of emotions: excitement ... apprehension ... anticipation ...

New York landmarks tend to come and go for this is a city in a constant state of change. Today's parking lot is suddenly tomorrow's palatial atrium*; a trendy discotheque tomorrow's cheap deli.

Perhaps it is this overwhelming sensation of change that pumps the city with adrenalin, electrifying every molecule of air around you. There's no bland response to New York. There's only loving or hating it.

Some landmarks, of course, are here to stay, like the Empire State – still the best bird's eye view – or St Patrick's Cathedral. Both are on Fifth Avenue and both, these days, are dwarfed by newer, towering neighbours. Old friends, like the Plaza Hotel and others are lucky enough to win renovation like the opulent Stanhope Hotel, reglossed and restored to its original grandeur.

Getting your bearings is most easily done from above. A number of buildings have observation platforms, while an incredible helicopter ride I took spins you over the whole incomparable scene, including bringing you eye to eye with that famous Lady of the Harbour herself, the Statue of Liberty. I was amazed to see real live people moving inside her crown as I flew around her. Do try to do that trip – it's sensational!

15

The bus routes are relatively easy to work out, but Livingstone would have been lost forever had he ventured into the New York subway system. Its complexity is mind-scrambling.

20

Lower Manhattan is where New York all began and today it's a little world in itself. It was this corner of New York which gave birth to the Stock Exchange. Greenwich Village was once a place where wealthy eighteenth-century landowners had country estates, but the estates were later split up and more modest homes built. Before long, the large houses were split into flats, artists moved in and Greenwich Village won its reputation as the city's bohemia. Today, Greenwich Village isn't quite as unconventional a place as it would like to think itself but it's still fun to browse in the bookshops and boutiques, drop into an elderly coffee house or take in a play at one of the off-Broadway theatres.

25

SoHo (the area south of Houston Street) took up where Greenwich left off. Artists moved into the cheap lofts of SoHo's cast iron buildings when industry moved out. Suddenly fashionable, SoHo is the place for chic art galleries and trend-setting restaurants.

30

The glitz and the wits – that's New York and that's its charm. Broadway's theatres manage to belt out the latest musicals more loudly than London's, even though a lot of them originated in our own West End. New York thrives on being showy.

35

On the food front, you can, of course, find whatever you want in New York. Wherever you're staying there is a place to eat or drink close by that brims with local colour. Even the humblest diner is bound to be impeccably clean and once you've got the hang of the language – ‘eggs over easy’ – feeding the family on a holiday budget is as easy as pie – Big Apple Pie.

40

And at the end of a week in New York as you flop into your plane seat trying to remember what sleep was like, the memories crowd in. And I remember the wit, the wisecracks and warmth of that exceptional being, the New Yorker.

Extract from 'Northern soul: culture, creativity and quality of place in Newcastle and Gateshead' by Anna Minton (2003).

This is an edited extract from a report written about the city of Newcastle upon Tyne in the north-east of England and Gateshead, the town on the opposite bank of the River Tyne. In the extract, Anna Minton attempts to explain what gives a place its character and makes it special to live in or to visit.

At one minute past midnight, the Baltic Flour Mill, on the banks of the River Tyne, stood illuminated against the skyline. An expectant crowd of thousands was packed into Baltic Square. Friday night revellers mingled alongside families and older people who had come into town especially for the occasion.

As fireworks exploded across the river, the converted Baltic Mill opened its doors – transformed from a flour factory into an art factory. The symbolic significance of the occasion was undeniable. They were back on the map. 5

The following week, the US magazine Newsweek dubbed Newcastle/Gateshead one of the world's eight most creative cities. Shortly afterwards, their joint bid for European Capital of Culture 2008 was tipped as the bookies' favourite. 10

The sense of excitement in Baltic Square was palpable*, not just because of the opening of the gallery, important though that was. Nor was it simply the result of Gateshead's iconic regeneration projects, from the towering presence of Antony Gormley's Angel of the North to the award-winning Millennium Bridge and the soon-to-be-completed Sage Music Centre. 15

There have been many attempts to define what it was that brought Newcastle and Gateshead to this point and what maintains the sense of energy and excitement present in the city today. The Newcastle Gateshead Initiative simply describes it as 'the buzz'.

For the visitor arriving in Newcastle by train, the Victorian grandeur of Robert Stephenson's High Level Bridge acts as a timely reminder of the city's former industrial identity as the historic capital of the North East. Similarly the viaduct that towers over the approach to the Quayside inspires awe at the engineering prowess that gave the City its reputation as 'the workshop of the world'. 20

Newcastle was also the industrial powerhouse of the North East. The railway and the turbine engine were invented here. Today, in the heart of the city centre, the newly-restored Georgian terraces of Grainger Town reflect the city's historic prosperity and confidence. Taking in the elegance of Grey Street, it is easy for the visitor to imagine the high living of the city's captains of industry and leaders. 25

There is no doubt that Newcastle and Gateshead have been at the forefront of the culture and leisure revival. Alongside the Newsweek accolade, Condé Nast recently heralded it as the UK's top holiday destination. The Quayside has been transformed from a 'rat-infested swamp' to one of the most stunning riverfronts in the UK. 30

And this is just one in a series of iconic image-transforming projects. The first was the Angel of the North in 1998. Next came the conversion of Gateshead's Baltic Flour Mill into an art factory and gallery, linked to the Newcastle side by the Stirling Architecture Prize-winning Millennium Footbridge. And due for completion next year is the Sage Music Centre, designed by Sir Norman Foster. A giant Hilton hotel is also under construction.

As one Newcastle cabbie confided, gone are the days when hotels would slip him a fiver to bring them customers from the station – now there are barely enough hotel rooms to go around.
