SOURCE A: From an account written after the First World War by Charlie Shepherd. Charlie Shepherd was a soldier who fought in the war. Here he is describing his experiences in a hospital on the Western Front in 1915.

I was in the hospital. They wanted a volunteer to give blood for a transfusion. I volunteered and they checked that I was the same blood group as the soldier who needed blood.

He'd lost a leg. Gangrene had set in and they'd had to amputate it. Oh, he looked like death! As white as a sheet!

I've still got the scar where they opened me up to get the tube into my vein. The blood flowed up the tube to a bottle and from there it went into the soldier's arm. I was watching him. Believe me, you could see the colour coming back into his face.

SOURCE B: From an article in The Lancet, June 1918. The author was a doctor who worked at a Casualty Clearing Station on the Western Front. The Lancet was a medical journal, which was a way of doctors sharing new ideas.

Every day, Casualty Clearing Stations are dealing with severely wounded patients who have lost a lot of blood. Their chance of recovery depends on receiving a blood transfusion.

There are three methods of transfusion:

- 1. A syringe is used to take blood from the donor; the blood is immediately injected into the patient's vein.
- 2. Blood can be stored briefly in glass containers.
- 3. The citrate method can be used to prevent blood clotting and store it for longer.

I have used the syringe method. This works well as the blood is outside the body for only 15–20 seconds and the whole process is controlled by the surgeon.
