Pearson – International GCSE Art and Design Taxonomy

How to use the Taxonomy in conjunction with the Assessment Grid

Both components in this qualification are 100% externally assessed, however centres will find it helpful to use the taxonomy and assessment grid to provide feedback on student's progress.

- When assessing work for each component, examiners will make a holistic judgement using the descriptors in the taxonomy, to establish which performance band matches most closely the candidate's work.
- Candidate's work that falls between two performance bands must achieve all the keyword descriptors in the lower band and some in the band above. Where this happens, examiners will use their professional judgement to decide which performance band is most appropriate using a 'best-fit' approach.
- After a performance band has been established, the next stage is to use the assessment grid to decide a mark within the performance band. Read through 'Applying the Assessment Grid' on page 41 of the specification prior to establishing a mark for each assessment objective and total mark.

Escaping a chain

'ESCAPE'

For the first study, I decided to add colour into my works therefore I chose to use watercolour on cartridge paper. Using my skills with biro pen, I presented the details of the chains and the effect of the breakage by blurring the debris. To add further dramatic effect, I painted the background orange on top of masking fluid.

In my second study, I experimented with oil paint on painting paper. The dark and cool colour scheme of the blue represent misery and depression while the contrasting light being exposed from the keyhole symbolises hope that lies behind the shut door.

First Attempt

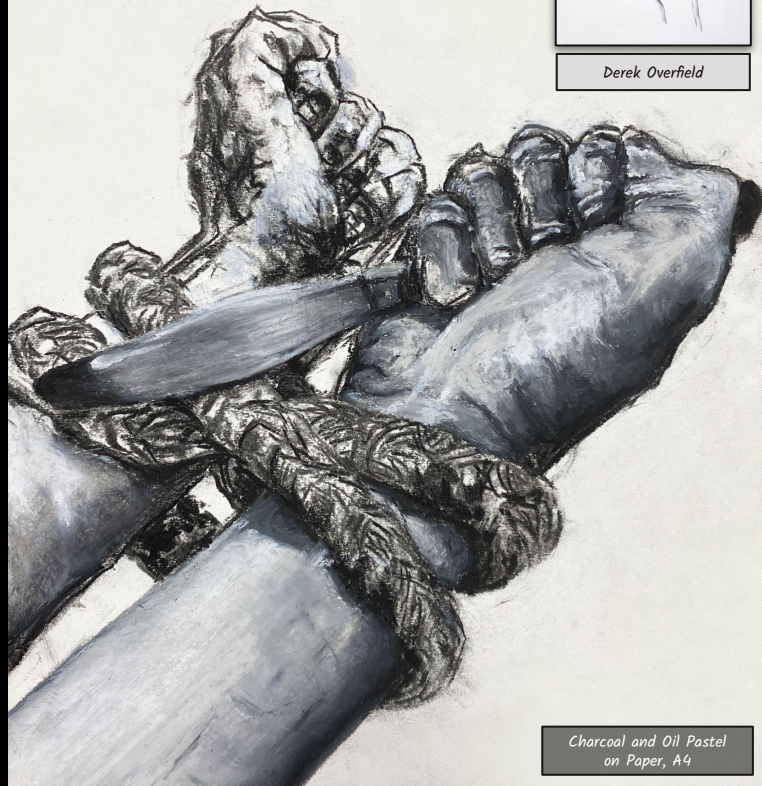

The third thing that came to my mind after brainstorming on the theme of 'Escape' was to 'move on'. I started by drawing with pencil of cartridge paper of my hand holding a rope. I took this picture with my hand angled downwards and the light coming in from above, this was to express the escape of one's circumstances by ascending to the hope for the better.

After the practice with the previous studies I settled on the idea of escaping the constraint of one's limit using sheer will! a combination of the three studies. My chosen artist was called Derek Overfield. A painter who made bold use of monochrome medium such as charcoal and chalk to create intensity in his presentation of the human body.

I used charcoal, conté pastels as well as compressed charcoals on cartridge paper for this. After a few tries of failing to achieve the balance between the expressive nature of Derek Overfield's work and realism. On my third draft, it was a success. For the right hand, I used more oil pastels to create volume of the hand hence creating the realism needed. While the other hand was expressed with all three mediums, I left some breathing space to express the minimalism which was the artist's theme. The use of a butter knife rather than something sharper helped to leave the impression to use such dull and seemingly trivial objects to escape the harsh conditions of one's situation symbolizing the grasp every opportunity to help oneself "move on".

In this painting, I selected the artist Tony Belobrajdic who used coloured medium to paint hands and faces the relaxed appearance of the hands holding the rope loosely represent a state of having escaped a struggle.

Last but not least, I integrated the style of one more artist, Guy Denning. His work is highlighted by the element of anger and strong emotions using his techniques of contrasting monotone and coloured medium in his work. Therefore I took a photo of me making a strong facial expression of rage the intensity is added by filling the entire page with subjects of my drawing, and leaving little space. The rope is detailed to give a point of focus while the highlight of the hands are emphasised with sparing use of white chalk pastels.

When I was talking the photos, I tried many different angles, and poses. After a few days I settled on grabbing a rope in a fighting stance to express the determination to escape. I decided to be shirtless in this photosop so the expression of strength and determination can be presented through the physical capabilities of the human body

In my sections for the final outcome, I chose the two sections where I can practice the styles of the artists the most. The hands were painted with acrylic paint on watercolour paper with the style of Tony Belobrajdic, my chest and head in the way of Guy Denning. The rope left as the only monotone part other than the background in the style of Derek Overfeld. In these artworks, I used a wide range of material such as acrylic, gouache, chalk pastels, conte pastels and charcoal
