Study Extract A.

Extract A: From A History of the French Revolution, published in 2002.

Despite Louis's plans being made in secret, his attempted escape was not successful. He only reached Varennes before he was brought back to Paris in disgrace. As a consequence of his actions Parisians began to talk, for the first time, of the idea of a republic. The king had shown his unreliability and a 'constitutional monarchy' was now unworkable. The Assembly voted to suspend the authority of the king and many petitions were sent to the Assembly, demanding the king be removed and put on trial.

Piedmontese troops arrived in the Crimea in early 1855 but many soldiers were soon infected with the deadly disease cholera. Nevertheless, the Piedmontese army did not disgrace itself and played a significant role in the victory over the Russians at Chernaya Rechka on 16 August. This led directly to the fall of Sebastopol. The battle won the Piedmontese army the respect and gratitude of its allies. Cavour's attendance at the Peace Conference in Paris was a sign of Piedmont's growing strength and influence. This also demonstrated the support Piedmont now had from Britain and France.

Extract C: From Germany 1858–1990, published in 2001.

Hitler believed he could overthrow the Weimar government by leading a putsch. However, Hitler's impatience, poor planning and poor organisation led to failure. He had overestimated support for an uprising. Crucially, Hitler could not rely on the total support of the Bavarian army. Moreover, Hitler had gone too far to be able to stop the putsch, having already worked his supporters up to fever-pitch excitement. What followed was a disaster for the Nazis. Sixteen Stormtroopers were killed, Hitler was sent to prison and the Nazi Party was banned.

The Rowlatt Acts were unjustified as they included controls such as imprisonment without trial or jury. The Muslim leader Muhammad Ali Jinnah resigned in protest, and the Acts were fiercely opposed by every Indian member of the Legislative Council. Study Extract E.

Extract E: From The USSR 1924–64, published in 1990.

What was different about Stalin's programmes of collectivisation and industrialisation was their scale, speed and intensity. The Party Congress of 1926 took the momentous decision to begin the transformation from an agricultural country into an industrial one, capable of producing what it needed by its own efforts. Stalin turned that into reality. From 1928 onwards, the Soviet State centralised and controlled the nation's economy. Stalin was convinced the survival of Soviet Russia depended upon these major economic changes, which are often referred to by historians as Stalin's 'Revolution'.

Study Extract F.

Extract F: From International Relations 1919–1989, published in 2001.

Truman was uncertain about Soviet intentions, and doubted that the USA and Soviet Union could remain friendly after the war. In April 1945 Truman spoke angrily to the Soviet Foreign Minister, Molotov. Truman insisted that the Soviets must carry out the Yalta Agreement and allow free elections in Poland. He would not listen to Molotov's explanations. This was a major step towards the start of the Cold War. After only eleven days in power Truman had bossed around the USSR, an allied country which had contributed more in blood and agony than the USA had during the war.

Gerald Ford, the nation's first unelected president, faced a distrustful nation. Ford felt the effects of Nixon's actions in the Watergate Scandal. The presidency was discredited; the nation's economy was in decline. Ford was an honourable man who tried to end 'the long national nightmare.' But when he issued a full pardon to Richard Nixon, his approval ratings declined sharply. Some suggested, though with no evidence, that he had made a deal with Nixon. During the course of his brief presidency, Ford was constantly mocked in political cartoons and comedy shows.

Study Extract H.

Extract H: From South Africa 1948–2000, published in 2001.

Hendrik Verwoerd's impossible plans for South Africa's future were seriously harmful. As far as the blacks were concerned, he was evil. Verwoerd was keen to appear to improve the image of apartheid in the eyes of the world. His solution was to offer to the blacks the apparent chance to develop as they wanted in their homelands, separately from the whites. These homelands could become completely independent nations, nicknamed 'Bantustans', but no other nations recognised them as independent states. They were far too small, with little economic or social strength.
