1 The French Revolution, c1780–99

Study Extract A.

EXTRACT A: From A History of France, published in 2002.

Between 1789 and 1791, the Constituent Assembly worked hard on the details of how to replace the old system of government. This was extremely difficult as it had been easier to destroy the old system than create a new one. However, it eventually created a system that laid the foundations for the new French government. A new constitution was introduced. The right to vote was given to ‘active citizens’. The new system was a great leap forward and significant improvement on the corrupt and unfair ancien régime system.

2 Development of a nation: unification of Italy, 1848–70

Study Extract B.

EXTRACT B: From A History of Italy, published in 2008.

Protests and demands for change and reform triggered the revolutions of 1848 in the Italian states. These protests were entirely driven by people who were in very difficult circumstances. Violent food riots, caused by poor food harvests, were seen from north to south. Peasants responded with savage violence against land enclosure, which had taken away their common land. In the north, textile workers, who had been replaced by machines, robbed factories and destroyed weaving machinery. All this led to eighteen months of unrest in the Italian peninsula.

3 Germany: development of dictatorship, 1918–45

Study Extract C.

EXTRACT C: From A History of Germany, published in 1996.

The Weimar Constitution was, in many ways, a reflection of the problems that existed in German society. It was a mixed-up collection of different political ideas. It was doomed from the start because there was so much confusion about what it hoped to achieve. Although it was one of the most democratic documents in the world in 1919, it was doubtful whether such a democratic constitution could work. The German population was not in any way ready for a system of government that was decided by the people.

4 Colonial rule and the nationalist challenge in India, 1919–47

Study Extract D.

EXTRACT D: From A History of India, published in 2010.

On 26 July 1945, the Labour Party came to power in Britain. Nehru was delighted by Labour's victory. Congress was confident that Labour's victory would lead to significant changes in India. The British Prime Minister, Clement Attlee, indicated that Britain would allow a complete transfer of power. This would smooth the way to independence in India. Elections would be held throughout India, allowing people to choose their own representatives to form an assembly. The link between Congress and the Labour Party made agreement much easier.

5 Dictatorship and conflict in the USSR, 1924–53

Study Extract E.

EXTRACT E: From A History of Europe, published in 1982.

In the Fourth Five-year Plan the consumer suffered. The reconstruction of industry was the priority after the Second World War, and Stalin was determined in his aim to strengthen Soviet industry. Agriculture was reorganised into new collectives, but production was as low as ever. By 1953, the total agricultural production was only just above what it had been when Stalin came to power, and the number of livestock was 10 per cent down. By 1953, Stalin had made the Soviet Union the world's second largest industrial power, but the strengthening of industry had been accomplished by crippling agriculture.

6 A world divided: superpower relations, 1943–72

Study Extract F.

EXTRACT F: From A History of Europe, published in 2004.

Soviet Communism was seen by the West as a threat to non-Communist states, and had created hostility between East and West before 1945. In fact, the Grand Alliance was a convenient temporary arrangement between Britain, the USA and the Soviet Union – states which otherwise were hostile to each other. The Soviet Union said it was the defender of people around the world against western capitalist countries like the USA where ‘Big Business’ took advantage of the people. The USA, in turn, saw itself as the defender of the ‘Free World’ against the aim of the Soviet Union to expand Communism.

7 A divided union: civil rights in the USA, 1945–74

Study Extract G.

EXTRACT G: From A History of the United States, published in 2010.

HUAC began to extend its activities and its interviews began to take place with terrifying frequency. HUAC wanted a higher profile for its activities, and between 1947 and 1951 it targeted Hollywood. People working in Hollywood who had left-wing sympathies, were now considered to be a threat. So were those who had simply praised Russians in films about the Second World War. There was a feeling that the film industry had been infiltrated by communists. Some performers, however, spoke out against the pressure and persecution by HUAC, saying that the hysteria reached into every part of America.

8 South Africa: from union to the end of apartheid, 1948–94

Study Extract H.

EXTRACT H: From A History of South Africa since 1948, published in 2000.

De Klerk did not seem like someone who would make changes to apartheid policies. He was a lifelong National Party member and a strong believer in racial separation. Yet in his first speech to Parliament in February 1990, he set out drastic changes that abandoned years of apartheid policies. He made changes because he had to, in order to bring law and order back to South Africa. The country was on the verge of civil war and the government could not regain full control. The economy was in deep trouble and would only get worse if nothing was done.
