Africa Solo

To make myself feel better for stopping early I justified it like this: it looked like more heavy rain was on the way, I was desperate for a night's sleep, and I had a cold. I had only covered 135 miles, but had made it past another major city and across another border. I was making excuses; I felt like I was being weak. The internal doubts about my decision to stop early nagged me.

There is no mains electricity in Longido so it was a cold shower and then it was back to the main road on a mission to find dinner. By this time there were a lot more men around. Dressed in deep-red robes, many with huge fresh loops in their ears, others wearing striking silver earrings. They were all tall and willowy but with the look of men who lived their entire lives outdoors. I joined the throng and managed to buy some tape. The daily rains had made my handlebar tape split.

The first place I found, a small café, was a very simple set-up with half a dozen tables and an open kitchen. But this was not a shack; this had been designed and was very clean and tidy. I loved sitting there, writing my diary, watching these ladies being completely happy and entirely themselves; one of them even did a dance behind the counter which was greeted with hilarity by her friend. It wasn't something I had witnessed for a long time.

Safari Tips 'Now Now'

Shhh... You aren't in a zoo and the animals are not domesticated.

Behaviour

When safari goers are visiting animals in their natural habitat the excitement can be daunting. The urge to get up, wave your arms, and yell is not something we would ever recommend. When on safari humans are just guests of the animals and should act accordingly.

Many of the safari animals are dangerous and it doesn't matter when you're in a truck if an elephant decides to charge. In fact, while elephants may be some of the most incredible animals on this planet, they're also immensely dangerous and a member of the 'big five animals'.

Clothing

Not only is it fun to don the safari get up, but those green and khaki clothes actually serve a practical purpose too. Safari clothes are purpose built and made to be comfortable, blend in with the environment, and hold up to the elements of the African bush. If you're doing some bush walks we recommend packing a good pair of safari boots to wear.

Time

Anyone who is familiar with 'Africa time' will understand that there are several meanings to the word now.

There is 'now,' 'just now,' and 'now now'. 'Now' could mean anywhere from five minutes to two months later. 'Just now' means in the next hour or so. And 'now now' actually means now – the moment. So, when you're on safari it's best to put the technology away and enjoy the 'now now'.

Text 3

This is an account of an astronaut who has been stranded on Mars.

LOG ENTRY: SOL 9

So yeah. Food, water, shelter all taken care of. I'm going to start rationing food right now. Meals are pretty minimal already, but I think I can eat a three-fourths portion per meal and still be all right. That should turn my three hundred days of food into four hundred. Foraging around the medical area, I found the main bottle of vitamins. There's enough there to last years. So I won't have any nutritional problems (though I'll still starve to death when I'm out of food, no matter how many vitamins I take).

Every astronaut on the mission had two specialities. I'm a botanist and mechanical engineer; basically, the mission's fix-it man who played with plants. The mechanical engineering might save my life if something breaks.

I've been thinking about how to survive this. It's not completely hopeless. (Assuming they didn't cancel the program in the wake of my 'death'). Ares 4 will be landing at the Schiaparelli crater, which is about 3200 kilometres away from my location here in Acidalia Planitia. No way for me to get there on my own. But if I could communicate, I might be able to get a rescue. Not sure how they'd manage that with the resources on hand, but NASA has a lot of smart people. So that's my mission now. Find a way to communicate with Earth. But one thing at a time here. For now, I'm well fed and have a purpose: fix the radiology.

LOG ENTRY: SOL 10

Well, I've done three Extra Vehicular Activities and haven't found any hint of the communications dish. I may as well yell towards Earth for all the good that will do me. I could throw together a rudimentary dish out of metal I find around the base, but this isn't some walkie-talkie I'm working with here. Communicating from Mars to Earth is a pretty big deal, and requires extremely specialised equipment. I won't be able to whip something up with tinfoil and gum.
